Knight Solutions to Support Sales of REHAU Construction Products to Federal Government Projects

LEESBURG, Va., May 4, 2010 – REHAU has announced the establishment of a teaming relationship to pursue federal government contracts with the construction management firm Knight Solutions. A service-disabled veteran-owned small business, Knight Solutions will support the sale of REHAU's sustainable building technologies including radiant heating and cooling, geothermal ground loops and commercially rated vinyl window systems throughout the United States.

"With a product range that encompasses the building envelope and HVAC systems, REHAU gives us many opportunities to meet the performance targets of low-energy building construction and renovation projects," said Kevin Knight, chief executive officer of Knight Solutions. "By combining REHAU's extensive line of cutting-edge building systems with Knight Solutions' construction management and installation services, we offer government agencies and property owners a very comprehensive solution."

"Knight Solutions' experience with government contracting and status as a small, disadvantaged business will enable REHAU's energy-efficient systems to successfully compete for government projects, many of which are being funded by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act," said Dr. Kathleen Saylor, chief executive officer for REHAU North America. "We look forward to working with Knight Solutions to achieve the best possible return on economic stimulus investments in building projects throughout the United States."
